An unusually interesting cookery book. The authoress states on the title-page that the receipts contained herein are all original, and not culled from other works. Indeed, many of them seem very unusual and savour of local culinary traditions, e.g., Snail soup, soup of pounded field-fares (a bird), fish dumplings, crayfish "knödel," pike with sauerkraut, fish sausages, partridge pasty, lentil and pigeon pasty, frogs-legs on the spit, stuffed crayfish, haunch of venison in pastry with Kirsch, a variety of "poulet en vessie," sweet soufflé of crayfish, snail salad, etc., etc. There is also a section on carving illustrated with woodcuts. Not in Vicaire.

50 full-page engravings shewing the anatomy of the human body, mostly taken from Vesalius and Coiter. Plater, born in the remote mountain hamlet of Rechen above Visp (1536), was one of the earliest anatomists in Germany and Switzerland to dissect the human body. Some of the sections of the ear and the eye are probably from his own cuts. According to Choulant the bones and the muscles are in the best manner of the Swiss painters, Ch. Maurer and Tobias Stimmer, and the etching probably by Stimmer himself. Paper somewhat discoloured in places, but a large copy. (De Feyfer, D. 51. Choulant-Frank, p. 216).

A very rare edition, but a worn and partly stained copy. "Like Dodoens and Clusius, he aimed to introduce order into his descriptions of plants, and may be said to have put forward the first sketch of a natural method of classification. He took into account the general habit, the external form, the manner of growth of the whole plant or the flower, and dealing mainly with these points he put together large 'families' or 'classes'."
